

in the case of the following sentence, the verb know is used in its primary sense, and the verb believe in its secondary sense:

He knows that he believes in God.

With some difficulty I find it is the best way to begin a new book to go back to the original manuscript and copy it out again. This is done by first selecting a portion of the original manuscript and copying it out in a new book. The new book is then used as a guide for the rest of the manuscript. This is done until the entire manuscript is copied out.

This commodity was the 14th day of June